SUMMARY:

Community School Districts (CSDs) and School Administrative Districts (SADs) are both multi-town forms of school organizations. Their school boards have roughly the same powers and duties. Both boards can call special budget meetings in the case of financial emergencies to ask the voters to authorize the board to borrow the additional funds needed to operate the schools. CSD boards could also ask the voters at these special budget meetings to approve a "special assessment on the member municipalities." While generally never used, the imposition of a special tax assessment on municipalities after their town budgets and tax rates have been set was felt to impose an unnecessary burden on the towns. The bill removes the authority of the special budget meetings in CSDs to impose additional assessments. It retains the voters authority in these budget meetings to authorize the CSD board to borrow money.
