LVWD

SUMMARY: This bill, carried over from the First Regular session, sought to create new provisions in the Criminal Code to deal expressly with unauthorized interference with computer data, unauthorized interference with computer equipment or supplies, and unauthorized interference with computer use. The bill made these activities Class E, D, and C crimes, the classification depending on the circumstances of the particular offense.

The bill was withdrawn with promises from the State Police that they would study the problem of computer crime during the summer and perhaps develop proposed legislation for next session. Concerns with LD 36 included: the extent of the computer crime problem in Maine, whether current provisions of the Criminal Code are applicable to computer crime, and whether LD 36 is drawn too broadly so that activity that should not be criminal or that is tangentially related to computer crime might be within its purview.
