SUMMARY:

This bill would have identified segments of outstanding and significant rivers located in plantations and towns subject to LURC jurisdiction and regulated those segments like other segments of outstanding and significant are regulated under the rivers bill (which is different than the way LURC regulates these segments now). The bill would have regulated outstanding river segments under the shoreland zoning law under which significant river segments are currently regulated by creating a new set of minimum requirements for construction and would have expanded the shoreland zoning protection for significant river segments. Finally, the bill would have allowed LURC to adopt shoreland standards for significant and outstanding river segments in plantations or towns within commission jurisdiction which are more restrictive than those imposed by the rivers bill only if the voters of the municipality approved those standards.
