SUMMARY

The original bill would have required the Department of Environmental Protection to provide financial assistance to individuals or small businesses that are required under law to clean up a hazardous waste site, but who, if compelled to do so, would face financial ruin. The bill established a means test as a standard for determining "financially ruinous" costs, and directed the board to adopt rules implementing the bill by January 1, 1992.

The committee amendment (H-62) strikes the original bill and adds a provision to protect innocent landowners from liability on uncontrolled hazardous substance sites where hazardous substances came to be located solely through the conduct of the 3rd parties before the innocent landowners acquired the sites. The intent of this amendment is to offer the same innocent landowner defense as is available under CERCLA (the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980).
