LD 509 permitted minors employed in willful violation of the child labor laws to sue their employers under the common law or any statutory cause of action while continuing to receive compensation under the Workers' Compensation Act. If the minor prevailed in this action, the employer's workers' compensation liability was deducted from the civil action damages. If the employer was insured for workers' compensation liability, the employer's insurer could recover any compensation paid to the minor from the employer.

Provisions of the bill were incorporated into an omnibus child labor bill, the new draft of LD 905.
