SUMMARY

This bill required that a request for payment for workers' compensation medical services be submitted on a form approved by the commission and contain all medical information to permit evaluation of the reasonableness and compensability of the services provided. It amended the 44-day rule by changing the number of days to 45 and by beginning the time period to the receipt by the employer of medical records required to make a determination of whether to pay or controvert. It excepted from this subsection provisional payments made without prejudice at the informal conference with the permission of the commissioner. It permitted payment of benefits without prejudice. It changed the waiting period for compensation for incapacity to work from 3 days to 5 days. It changed informal conference procedures to provide that the commissioner shall require the employee to provide timely medical reports prior to informal conference. It allowed provisional payments and provided for their continuation and termination in the event of a notice of controversy by the employee or employer. It required the employer to keep records of injury and, if it results in loss of work of 5 days, required a report to the commission within 12 days after notice or knowledge of injury. It amended the definition of prevail to account for provisional payments.

SUMMARY

The recently enacted Sunday sales laws prohibited certain employers from requiring employees to work on Sunday. This bill provided that it is illegal for those employers to ask potential employees questions concerning availability for Sunday work. The Director of the Bureau of Labor Standards was required to enforce this provision.
