This bill also would have made hunting without written permission a prohibited act under the fish and wildlife laws, Maine Revised Statutes, Title 12, chapter 702. Hunting without permission would have been defined as carrying a firearm or bow and arrow onto the property of another without written permission unless that property is owned by the State and open to hunting or is posted as open to hunting. Publishing permission in a local newspaper or annotating a property deed would also have constituted written permission. A person would not have been guilty of hunting without permission if that person lacked written permission but was hunting on land in unorganized territory. Municipalities would have been encouraged to make available to the public maps showing areas open to hunting.
