use of the product for the purposes for which the department needs it. It is proper to consider not only the grade or quality of the shovel, but also its comparative efficiency for the work it is to be used for. For example, if the price of one was 20% higher and the quality was 50% higher, the higher priced shovel could be accepted without doubt.

Moreover, section 42 of said chapter says in part:

"shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, taking into consideration the qualities of the articles to be supplied, their conformity with the specifications, the purposes for which they are required, and the date of delivery."

It would seem obvious that when the quality of one article is superior to another and it is better fitted for the purposes required and the date of delivery is sooner and the price differential is reasonably in favor of the purchase, the better article could and should be purchased.

Moreover, it must be remembered that the administrative code was aimed mainly at bulk transactions that could be fairly standardized. The field of heavy road equipment with the varying sizes, weights, adaptability, durability, etc., of the machine does not lend itself to standardization except in a comparative manner.

It is my opinion that there is clear language in the statutes to authorize consideration of the superior values and uses of one type of equipment over another and that the Commission is not compelled to buy the equipment that meets the minimum specifications.

Re: U. S. Government Employee Convicted of Drunken Driving

We have the following fact situation: X was convicted of operating under the influence of intoxicating liquor. His license was revoked under the provisions of Section 150 of Chapter 22, R. S. 1954.

He is employed by the U. S. Government and part of his duty is apparently to drive fire fighting equipment located at Fort Williams. The question involves his right to operate the U. S. Government fire fighting equipment upon the highways of the State of Maine.

In the first instance the State of Maine could not have required him to have a license to operate U. S. Government equipment over its highways. Johnson v. Maryland, 254 U. S. 51. This being true, the State of Maine is powerless to suspend any right that may be granted him by a federal law to operate over the highways in this State while under orders from the Federal Government. His right to operate in all other capacities stands suspended.

If he operates U. S. Government equipment pursuant to an order from his superior on the highways of the State of Maine, it is our opinion that he is not violating the laws of this State.
