Monhegan Island has had a seasonal lobster fishery that occurs in winter for over 100 years. Participants in the fishery did not fish for lobsters at other times of the year. Participants historically imposed locally developed trap limits themselves. The fishery historically has been underpinning of the island economy when, during the winter, there was no other source of income on the island. This proposal is to secure that historical practice by establishing a Monhegan Lobster Conservation Area that limits the amount of fishing practiced in that area by limiting the number of participants and by requiring a training program as a precursor to new entry into the fishery. The purpose of the training program is to foster through knowledge of local stewardship environmental ecological conditions and local fishing practices.
