Allowing the principal and interest costs of nonstate-funded school construction projects to be included in school administrative units' debt service costs for state subsidy purposes may reduce the number of state-funded school construction projects that could be approved for funding within existing debt service limits.

The additional costs associated with adopting rules can be absorbed by the State Board of Education utilizing existing budgeted resources.'

SUMMARY
