The selectmen of said town of Orneville have used all possible means to ascertain if the man has a pauper settlement in any town in the state, but are unable to find that he has ever gained one. They found on investigation that he had lived in the plantation of Katahdin Iron Works, in the towns of Williamsburg, Milo, Brownville, Dover and Dexter, but at no place longer than two years, and his parentage is so obscure that no evidence of a derivative settlement could be found.
