Chapter 278.

Resolve in favor of Free Coal.

Whereas, Maine is more distant from the coal field of the United States than any other state east of the Mississippi river, and that thereby the cost of coal is correspondingly higher than in most other states; and Preamble.

Whereas, our state is engaged largely in manufacturing, coal in large quantities for steam purposes is necessary to enable it to compete on equal terms with those states which afford cheap coal; and

Whereas, there is near to us geographically in Nova Scotia an abundant supply of steam coal, which may be cheaply mined and sent to our ports by comparatively inexpensive water transportation; and
