The Chair requested the Honorable Leigh Ingalls Saufley, Chief Justice of the Maine Supreme Judicial Court, to please step forward and address the Joint Convention.

Chief Justice SAUFLEY: Thank you very much. Given the hour and the scheduling changes, I'm just delighted to see so many of you here this afternoon. This is wonderful. I do want to mention before I begin that I brought the sunshine as is always true, correct? Okay we are going with that.

President Thibodeau, Speaker Pro Tem Herbig, and Honorable Members of the 128th Maine Legislature, good afternoon, thank you so much for finding a way to fit this presentation into your very challenging schedule. It's been a hard winter, and I so much appreciate all of your efforts.

It's an honor as always, to be invited to address this Joint Convention of the Maine Legislature. As you've heard, I'm accompanied today by my amazing husband of 36 years, Bill Saufley, who consistently accommodates my scheduling changes with great humor. And I have to say, the Chief Executive told me he was very disappointed not to be able to be here this evening. I am even more disappointed because Bill wore his Patriots tie just for the Chief Executive. I also have to say hello to my parents, Jan and Dick Ingalls, who would have been here, but I convinced them not to travel tonight, so they're watching at home in South Portland, thanks to your terrific technology. So I get to say, hi, mom.

I'm also accompanied, as you saw, by my wonderful colleagues from the Supreme Judicial Court and the new Chief Judge of the District Court who you will hear more about in a minute. The extraordinary people in the Maine Judicial Branch are working very hard to meet shifting public needs, and my presentation today will focus on those changes.

But as we talk about changes, it's important to anchor our discussions in the bedrock principles of good government. This Joint Convention, where the Chief Justice is invited by legislative leadership to present a report on the state of the Judiciary, represents a true tradition of good government that we all value highly. And this year is an important milestone in this great tradition.

Forty years ago, in 1977, I hadn't been born yet and I'm not under oath, Chief Justice Armand Dufresne, Maine's first Franco-American Chief Justice, delivered the very first State of the Judiciary. So, for four decades now, broken only by a couple of years in the early '80s, Chief Justice Dufresne, Chief Justice McKusick, Chief Justice Wathen, and I have had the honor of an annual invitation to address the joint houses of the Maine Legislature.

Now, I emphasize this history because we don't take this tradition for granted. It doesn't happen in every state, and the benefits of formal communication between the separate, but equal branches of government can't be overstated. So very much has been accomplished in the last decade because of the work that we have all done together. With great traditions anchoring our work, my focus today is the change in the pursuit of improved public service.

Now, to be clear, there has been no change in the mission of the Judicial Branch. To administer justice by providing a safe, accessible, efficient and impartial system of dispute resolution that serves the public interest, protects individual rights, and instills respect for the law. But changes in society and changes in technology, changes in the public's expectation of government require us to evolve consistently in the way we fulfill that mission.

So, today I will update you on: Changes in the leadership of the trial courts; changes in the infrastructure of the courts; changes in delivery of justice to families in Maine; changes in the processing of criminal cases, including fines and bail, the addiction crisis, and domestic violence. And finally, I will have two requests for you. Now, each time I get to this point I remember Joe Brannigan, who some of you may remember, telling me that he loved the outline at the beginning of my presentation because he would write down the last thing and he would know when I was almost done talking. So there you are. When I get to two requests, it's almost time to go home.

The first of the changes is in the leadership of the trial courts. The Chief Justice of the Superior Court and the Chief Judge of the District Court are positions created by Statute. We now have established that they will have three-year terms, renewable once. The Chiefs are responsible for the operations of the trial courts, and they must assure that the trial courts are responsive to the needs of the public. These judicial leaders must have the respect of their colleagues and the legal profession. They work very long hours, filling both roles of judges and managers. Chief Justice Roland Cole is the new Superior Court Chief. He has an extraordinary history as a Maine Trial Judge, but, unfortunately, he had a family emergency, and I will introduce him to you at another time. Chief Judge Mary Kelly is here tonight and I will ask her to stand, and I've explained to her she has to remain standing until I stop talking about her. So you'll let me know if that doesn't happen. Chief Judge Kelly came to Maine, well, now let me be clear about this, as Judy Harrison of the Bangor Daily News wrote, Judge Kelly grew up just 12 miles east of Bangor: Bangor Erris, in County Mayo, Ireland, that is. Chief Judge Kelly came to Maine from Ireland as an exchange law professor in 1987. She found Maine to be such a wonderful place that she stayed on, becoming an American citizen in 1990. Chief Judge Kelly worked in the Legislature's Revisor's Office, in the Attorney General's Office handling child support and child protection cases, and in the District Court as a Family Law Magistrate. In 2010 she was appointed to the District Court. She is well respected by her colleagues and she's already beginning to make her mark in improved public service. We're very lucky to have her in this role.

Next, I'm very pleased to provide an update on a monumental change made possible by the three branches of government working together to make the courts more efficient, responsible, and accessible. The digital world is finally coming to the Maine courts. Working with Tyler Technologies, a company with significant Maine presence, we expect to implement the new Case Management System first in the Violations Bureau which handles between 85,000 and 100,000 traffic cases statewide each year. And then Penobscot and Piscataquis Counties will be the first courts where the full digital system will be implemented in 2019. Moving from a paper-based court system to an electronic one will revolutionize the way we do business. The new system will allow 24/7 access by litigants from anywhere in the world that's connected to the internet. Members of the public will not need special programs to access their cases. Interactive court forms will assist unrepresented litigants to initiate and process their cases. And the system will greatly improve access, efficiency, and transparency for all involved. But recognizing that broadband access is not yet equally available in every area of the state, our plans include public kiosks in the courthouses, to make sure that all members of the public benefit from this improvement. We have much work ahead of us to implement a system that, while transparent and accessible, must also protect personal privacy and guard against identity theft. To address this challenge, we are about to launch the new Task Force on Transparency and Privacy that will include a broad array of stakeholders. I am grateful for the bipartisan support that is making all of this possible. Governor LePage steadfastly supported funding for the new technology, as did the Legislature, including leadership in both parties, especially the Judiciary and Appropriations Committees. And Representative Fredette, who first got the ball rolling six years ago, as a freshman in the Appropriations Committee and sent me a text telling me he could not be here tonight. So there will be a no applause for Representative Fredette. Please don't tell him I said that.

Next, the state's aging courthouses are also benefiting from much-needed changes. Those of you who are veteran legislators have heard me bemoan the physical facilities of Maine's courts. But with the bipartisan support of the Chief Executive and the Legislature, we continue to make steady improvements to Maine's courthouses. Without sacrificing rural access to justice, we've reduced the number of separate court buildings from 47 to 36, and in the process, we've improved safety and access in many counties. In 2016, after legislation was approved by the 127th Legislature, we began work toward improved facilities in York, Oxford and Waldo counties. We will improve or replace eight inadequate buildings with three efficient, handicapped accessible and vastly safer courthouses that will improve the delivery of justice for generations to come. And I want to thank the Chief Executive, and President Thibodeau, former Speaker Eves, all of them for their support. But I especially want to thank the four members of the 127th Maine Legislature who gave so much time to the legislatively created Site Selection Commission for the York County Courthouse. I'm going to ask them if they're here to stand. Senator Ron Collins, former Senator Linda Valentino, who is not here. Stay right there, Senator. Representative Bob Foley, and Representative Anne-Marie Mastraccio. These people toured all of York County, I am told, by various busses, vans, donkeys, I'm not sure what. But they put hours into the work, to do what you asked them to do last year, and I'm so grateful. They deserve a round of applause.

So with improvements to buildings and technology, access to justice is getting better every year, except for one critical aspect: Litigants too often can't afford lawyers to help them with their legal problems. We still have a way to go to ensure that everyone in court is assisted by capable counsel. There is a constitutional right to a lawyer in criminal proceedings, but too many Maine people are not able to afford a lawyer for civil proceedings that may affect their families, their livelihoods, housing, and healthcare.

But the good news is that Maine lawyers continue to give generously of their time and money to assist their fellow-Mainers in need. The Campaign for Justice raised over $600,000 from Maine lawyers and judges to make free legal services available to the poor. In addition to donating money, Maine lawyers participating in the Katahdin Program donated over 11,000 hours of free legal work, with a market value of approximately $1.7 million. In 2016, with the assistance of the New Lawyers Section of the Maine State Bar Association, 22 local libraries participated in the Lawyers in Libraries Program where people could find legal help right in their own communities. The Civil Legal Services Fund, which you -- the Maine Legislature established, provided over $1.4 million to legal service providers to assist the elderly, low income parents, the disabled, victims of domestic violence, and many others in need. We absolutely have to do more, but I am grateful to you and to the many lawyers who have voluntarily stepped up to help those in need.

Turning now to the changes in the actual case process, I want to thank the legislative branch, the 127th Legislature, and the executive branch for passage of L.D. 890, An Act To Ensure a Continuing Home Court For Cases Involving Children. Prior to the passage of that bill, many cases involving the same children were split between the State District Courts and the County Probate Courts. A child protection case would proceed in the District Court, but any adoption, guardianship, or name change involving the same child would have to be handled by the separate County Probate Court. Imagine having to navigate two separate court systems, separate clerks, separate judges, separate rules of procedure, often even in different buildings, all regarding an issue affecting the same child and the same family? It was difficult; it was more complicated than it should have been; and it did not serve children and families well.

Working diligently over two sessions of the 127th, the Judiciary Committee found a way to address the challenges, and the executive branch found a way to fund the proposal. The new law, allowing families to proceed in one court, the District Court, went into effect in July 2016. Today, I'm pleased to report wonderful progress in the seven months since the bill went into effect. As of last Friday, 173 adoptions, 50 guardianships, and 5 name changes, all involving families and children in District Court cases that would have required separate case filings in the Probate Court, were completed expeditiously and exclusively in the District Courts. These improvements would not have happened without the commitment of Representative Kim Monaghan, the sponsor; co-sponsor Speaker Gideon; the Judiciary and Appropriation Committees, and the executive branch. Representative Monaghan, are you here today? She is not here. There will be no applause. We've established the rule. So let me say I'm also grateful to Justice Ellen Gorman, Chief Judge Kelly, the Probate Judges, especially Judge Carol Emery, and a host of lawyers and District Court Judges who assisted in rapidly creating new rules to assure the expedited processing of the cases. And Professor Deirdre Smith, who heads the Cumberland Legal Aid Clinic, deserved special mention for her advocacy for this legislation. Those 173 adoptions represent a concrete example of how, when we work together, we can find solutions that make government work better for Maine people.

In another area of change, bringing improvements for Maine families, Chief Judge Kelly has, this week, delivered a report to the Judiciary Committee regarding changes and improvements in the delivery of guardian ad litem services. The GAL report describes several years of work in the Legislature and then in the judicial branch which resulted in many substantial changes, including the adoption of clearer standards of conducts for guardians ad litem, improved training, precise billing limits that must be set before any work is done, the creation of a 12-member Guardian Ad Litem Review Board, which is a complaint process independent of the judicial branch, and an evaluation process for consumers of guardian ad litem services upon completion of their cases. So we will in fact have feedback on how well the improved system is working for families.

We've also updated the judicial branch website to include more information on guardian ad litem services. Although my summary here today is actually relatively brief, you're welcome, the report is -- that's what gets the applause -- I know I'm standing between you and a long time ahead of you. Alright. I just want to make it clear that the guardian ad litem report, which is quite thorough, will be online and you can find it on the judicial branch website.

And finally, one last piece with regard to family and civil matters. We have several new process-improvement projects in the works. You'll see these people to my left looking very nervous because they're the ones who have to carry out all my promises. But I'm very proud to announce that we, the State of Maine, the Judiciary in the State of Maine, recently received news of a grant funding from the State Justice Institute to help us undertake a significant new effort to improve the way we process civil and business cases. Grants were awarded to only three states across the country. And we'll have more on this in the months to come.

And I turn now to some serious issues, some of the most pressing problems in our state, affecting several different aspects of our criminal justice system. And in keeping with my theme, I am pleased to tell you that some of the changes that have been accomplished or are in the works are showing real progress. But we are far from finding answers to too many of the challenges.

So let's begin with some good news. Last year, having completed the redesign of the criminal dockets into a single unified process, we moved to the next step, reducing the backlog in criminal dockets. And with your help, the results have actually been excellent. You all know the saying, "Justice delayed is justice denied." Witnesses become unavailable and even die, memories fade. Crime victims, the public, and mistakenly or wrongfully charged defendants are not well served when cases are delayed. In 2016 you approved funding to allow trial judges to increase the availability of jury trials and to provide overtime so that our marshals and clerks could work the necessary additional hours to address the backlog. And I'm pleased to report the effort was successful. In Fiscal Year 2016, the intense focus on criminal cases resulted in a 61 percent decrease in active, pending cases over one year old, and a 49 percent decrease over active pending cases over nine months old. Did you follow me with that? So thank you. I'm delighted you understood it because I had to go through those statistics 16 times to figure out exactly what it means, but here's what it really means. Cases are being reached much more quickly. New criminal charges can be resolved without delay. It took a lot of focus on the part of everyone involved, and I want to take this opportunity to recognize the great work that was done, not just by the judges and court employees, but also by the defense attorneys and the District Attorneys, all of whom stepped up to make this a priority. And many of the real heroes in this story are the hundreds of Maine citizens who respond to the call for jury duty. They often give up a day's or a week's pay, they leave their homes and their families, they struggle with parking, and then they're called on to make some of the most important decisions in the court system. We owe them all a debt of gratitude for their service. We could not have done this without them.

Another area where positive changes have begun is in the collection of fines and the analysis of the bail system. A group of judges and staff, led by Justice William Anderson, has undertaken a complete review of the Maine fine collection procedures. In order to assure that we do not have impoverished Mainers placed in difficult situations, clarified procedures and new forms will be promulgated that will assure that everyone who is convicted of a crime and ordered to pay a fine will understand clearly the amount due, when the fine must be paid, what to do if they can't meet the deadline, and who to talk to if that happens. While these clarified procedures will help, I continue to suggest that a meaningful, well-supervised, substantive public service program, particularly when combined with a restorative justice component, could provide an excellent option for accountability in place of mandatory fines.

Next, with regard to bail reform, I am here with a mea culpa. Last session I told you that I hoped to present a proposal this year for updating our antiquated bail system. In recent years we received a proposal for a new bail system that would have cost the General Fund an estimated additional $4 to 5 million. I told you that I thought it could be done for much less, that we could find a way to reduce the costs and still provide a much-needed update for the system. We do not yet have a proposal that I believe is sufficiently fiscally prudent for me to present to you; I hope to return next session with an improved plan.

And now I turn to the two areas of criminal justice where change is desperately needed, but the answers are just not clear. And I begin with the opiate/heroin epidemic. I will echo much of what you heard from the Chief Executive last week, but I believe it's worth repeating. Attorney General Mills has provided us with some horrifying statistics. The drug overdose deaths in 2016 were up again. 378 human beings lost their lives to a drug overdose last year in Maine. In a minute I am going to talk to you about homicides in Maine, and one of the statistics you'll hear is that there were 258 homicides in Maine over a ten-year period. There were more overdose deaths in one year than there were homicides in a decade. Even more frightening, in 2016 there were 2,380 administrations of Narcan, up from 1,565 in 2015. And this is the saddest number of all, there were 1,024 drug affected babies born in 2016, up again from the previous year. As the Chief Executive described it, this is just about three babies a day who start their lives in such a horrible way.

We see the effects of heroin, fentanyl, and now carfentanil, which you may be aware is an elephant tranquilizer. In every case type, not just criminal cases, these addictions affect families, businesses, and schools. And people often ask me the same question you are probably getting. What do we do to stop all of this? And I only have one answer. You've heard my answer before. We have to do everything. We must stop the drugs from coming into Maine. We must provide robust prevention programs. We must have real and meaningful treatment quickly available. We must have housing for people who have lost everything. And we must understand treatment in terms of months and years, not days and weeks.

You and the Chief Executive are already hard at work addressing many of these issues. You addressed the prescription medicine gateway last session, and discussions are underway right now regarding treatment resources. In the judicial branch, we are rethinking drug courts. Last year we reestablished the Bangor Adult Drug Treatment Court, and with that addition, there are now six drug courts along with the Co-Occurring Disorders Court and the Veterans Court. But sadly, drug courts can only reach a very small percentage of people plagued with drug addictions. There were 52 graduations in 2016, 52 people who successfully stayed clean and sober and were released from active judicial supervision. Statewide, approximately 247 people are currently in the adult drug courts. 247 people in the drug courts in a state where 358 people died of overdoses in one year, we can't delude ourselves that the drug courts alone will make the difference.

I have therefore asked Justice Nancy Mills, whose vision and relentless hard work helped create the extremely successful Veterans Court here in Augusta, to step up and take over the Drug Court Steering Committee. I am grateful Justice Mills said yes, and already her presence is felt. In March, just weeks away, she has arranged for national experts to come to Maine to meet with all of Maine's Drug Court judges and teams and the Trial Court Chiefs for an intensive two-day session, to bring them all up to date on what actually works with these pernicious addictions.

We know that we must consider updated models for Drug Courts and for the criminal and family dockets much more broadly. Re-entry programs for people leaving incarceration are beginning to show real promise. Diversion programs, which can help people avoid lengthy incarceration, must be consistent in providing up-to-date treatment options, and simultaneously requiring personal accountability. Wrap-around programs that involve families, housing, and jobs may provide another answer. None of this is cheap, but nothing is more expensive than allowing our state to sink further into the horror and sadness of the addiction crisis.

Moving now to another difficult topic, this year, I requested two separate reviews of the way our system of justice addresses domestic violence. The first review took a deep look at a single recent case in which one victim died and one was badly wounded. The second review was designed to give us a much broader analysis. For this review, I am grateful to the Attorney General's Office for its assistance and data. Our researcher looked at every murder in the State of Maine over a ten-year period, searching for patterns and places where we could all have done a better job protecting vulnerable Maine people from domestic violence. And here are a few of the things we learned: From 2006 to 2016, 250 people were victims of homicide in Maine. From the records provided, the researchers identified 126 of those deaths as related to domestic violence. In other words, almost half of the homicides result from domestic violence.

In the 126 domestic violence related homicides, most of the perpetrators, 88 percent were male. The victims were more evenly divided, 43 percent male, 57 percent female. About half of the 126 homicides took the lives of a spouse or intimate partner and just over 20 percent of the victims were children. Twenty-six children died as a result of domestic violence in that ten-year period. Fourteen of those children were only a year old or younger. And this is what led me to ask for the analysis in the first place. Far too many of the victims never sought help from the courts. As far as we can tell, 75 of the 126 victims, just about 60 percent, did not have any meaningful contact with the Maine courts before they were killed.

In the specific case review, we also learned that, in important bail review and sentencing proceedings, no criminal record checks for Maine or nationally were requested by law enforcement. That practice left judges, attorneys, and advocates with serious gaps in critical information. In many instances, the applicable ODARA risk analysis, which you mandated by law to be completed in particular crimes, was never provided to the judge. I understand that you have legislation before you this session intended to provide more thorough information to judges, and to close some of those gaps. I encourage your thoughtful consideration of those proposals.

In the judicial branch, the trial chiefs, working with a team of experienced trial judges, have determined that we need to make several changes which should be implemented quickly. Some of the important changes are these: At sentencing and bail hearings on serious charges, the presiding judge will require the prosecutor to provide the following information if it exists: Maine and national criminal history records; the victim's statement or presentation; and the ODARA or other risk assessment score. In addition, now that we all know how few of the victims sought timely help, there is something else we have to do. We have to stop assuming that victims will seek help. As neighbors, family members, employers, service providers, we must all be alert for the signs of isolation, control, and impending violence that are the harbingers of real lethality. And we must not look away and assume that someone else will take care of it.

I am pleased to report that this summer, in collaboration with the Maine State Bar Association, we will gather all of Maine's state court judges and many lawyers from all different practices to come together for this broader conversation about a more comprehensive approach to reducing and eliminating domestic violence in Maine. I'm also pleased to report that the Chief Executive has agreed to come and help us kick off the conference and share some of his very personal history.

And now I have two requests. First -- I hear the clapping over here. Not quite. First, as you may have heard me mention before, Maine's trial court judges are among the lowest paid in the nation. Have I mentioned that before? Even more distressing though is the fact that the pay scales of the marshals, clerks and other staff in the judicial branch have not remained competitive either with other law enforcement agencies or with what staff can make working in the private or public sector. We no sooner train new clerks and marshals then we lose them to other employers, and yet the clerks and the marshals are the unsung heroes of the Maine courts. You may have noticed that I did not begin today's presentation with my usual request for more marshal positions so that we can reach 100 percent entry screening. That's because the compensation problem is so bad we're struggling just to fill the positions we already have. We must adjust the compensation of court staff. Our recently completed study confirmed that we've fallen significantly below market averages. Ted Glessner will shortly be discussing all of this with the Appropriations Committee. And this is important. We have to act quickly to make judicial branch wages more competitive in order to attract and maintain good employees.

My second request has no money involved. I invite you to invite the Supreme Judicial Court to come to a high school in your district to preside over real appellate arguments at the school. Since 2005, at the request of the Maine Legislators the Maine SJC has traveled to 35 high schools across the state to help Maine students get a close-up view of how an appellate court works. Last year the court traveled to and heard cases in Fort Kent, South Berwick, and East Machias, thanks to invitations from Representatives John Martin and Bobbie Burns, Bobbie Beavers, and Senator David Burns. Bobbie Burns is one of my ancestors. So here's the good news. We have not yet created the schedule for October of 2017. So if you are interested in having the SJC come to a high school near you, talk to Mary Ann in the next week or so and she will help you work with the schools.

In closing, it has been a long day for all of you, and you've been very patient with me. And I want to thank every one of you in this chamber today who will spend hundreds of hours in this statehouse at great personal and financial sacrifice before the work of the 128th Maine Legislature is done. Your work does make a difference. Thank you for everything you do for the people of the State of Maine.
