SUMMARY

The social worker licensing law requires as a condition of licensure that social workers be supervised for a specified period by an individual holding a masters degree in social work. This bill requires the State to provide to State social workers the necessary supervision, and assistance in meeting other license requirements. The bill further extends by 2 years the period within which experienced social workers can apply for licensure without examination, if their failure to apply for a license was due to a misunderstanding of the law.

Committee Amendment "A" limits the responsibility of state agencies to their social worker employees to providing supervision. It limits further educational and examination grandfathering of social workers to those employed by the State and requires that they were so employed as of the termination of the previous grandfathering provision. It makes this provision retroactive in order to cover the period between the termination of the previous provision and the enactment of this provision.
