The bill requires parents to file affidavits with the court regarding income and assets for child support determination not only prior to final protection hearings under Title 22, section 4035, but also prior to hearings on preliminary protection orders, Title 22, section 4034, and motions for review, Title 22, section 4038, unless current information is already on file with the court. The bill also requires parents to provide information to the department when their child has been ordered into the custody of the Department of Human Services in a child protection proceeding, Title 22, chapter 1051, in a divorce proceeding, Title 19, chapter 13, or a juvenile proceeding, Title 15, chapter 507, so that the department can determine whether the child is eligible for federal, state or other 3rd-party benefits and also requires the parent to provide any necessary authorization for the department to apply for any benefits for which the child may be eligible.
